Dear Friends,

Your social investment in our mission last year, and compassion for those less fortunate, once again, literally saved lives and brought hope to so many households uncertain how they were going to feed themselves.

Last year, we continued our decade-long trend of providing more and healthier food to those who go hungry and who are at risk of hunger on any given day, week or month of the year. Our nutrition team traveled the region teaching individuals how to shop for and prepare healthy meals on a budget. Now, more elders with chronic health conditions are eating better. More, working families are learning how to stretch their dollars to buy and eat healthier food.

Our SNAP Outreach team enrolled more eligible households to receive SNAP benefits—a critical federal nutrition program without which about 147,000 individuals across western Massachusetts would have no other recourse than to turn exclusively to The Food Bank and its local feeding partners for food, which would completely overwhelm us. The SNAP team also promoted the innovative new Healthy Incentives Program (HIP), which matches SNAP purchases dollar for dollar at local farmers markets and the like. As a result, thousands of SNAP recipients were able to purchase fresh vegetables from local farmers during the harvest season.

Both SNAP and HIP are now at great risk. Funding cuts would cause a dramatic spike in hunger and food insecurity nationally.

Our advocacy efforts last year helped protect state and federal nutrition programs, and supported funding for some new initiatives like HIP. In addition, we persuaded more local schools to adopt Breakfast in the Classroom—a proven strategy to feed hungry children and improve academic performance.

Finally, we launched our region’s Coalition to End Hunger to “lead the community to end hunger,” advancing the second part of our mission in a real, tangible manner. Our partnership with health providers to feed patients at risk of hunger couldn’t have come sooner given the recent release of a study documenting that Massachusetts spends $1.9 billion annually on health-related costs associated with food insecurity.

We are committed to ever greater impact of all our work this year. We thank you so very much for your past and continued support of our goal to create a western Massachusetts where no one goes hungry and everyone has access to healthy food.

Launched in 2017, The Coalition to End Hunger is a collaborative network of leaders and organizations focusing on providing integrated social services for those who need them, erasing the stigma associated with hunger, and advocacy for public policy solutions. The coalition’s first initiative was launched in June 2017 in Holyoke in partnership with the Holyoke Health Center (HHC) and several other social service programs.

This screening and referral initiative is designed to identify food insecurity among pediatric patient households at HHC and provide them with healthy food and other needed social services to address the underlying causes of hunger. Using nationally-recognized and -tested food insecurity screening questions, HHC’s pediatric department conducts the screening as part of the patient check-in process. For those who screen positive for food insecurity, health providers refer them to The Food Bank. Upon receiving the referrals, The Food Bank provides nutrition services (including SNAP enrollment, nutrition education and information about neighborhood food assistance) and offers to make additional referrals to a network of partnering social service providers.

During the 12-week pilot period that ended in September 2017, pediatric providers served 2,543 patients. Sixty-one percent of those patients were screened for food insecurity and of those, 43 percent screened positive as food insecure.

“Our pilot was just within our pediatric group,” explains Dr. Vinny Biggs, pediatrician at HHC. “So, I see in the future being able to expand it to the rest of the providers at our health center, and an opportunity to be able to do food insecurity screenings and referrals in lots of medical settings throughout the valley. I think that would be a tremendous opportunity.”

Feedback about the pilot program’s screening and referral process was overwhelmingly positive. HHC patients, staff, and providers as well as partnering social services providers spoke highly of the program and acknowledged its importance for their patient/client population. Patients’ parents emphasized their gratitude for the referrals and resources received.

Currently, The Food Bank and its partners are expanding their initiative to the entire HHC patient population and beginning to identify new health provider partners in our region.
